

The people of Nevada are gradually turning their attention from mining to stock raising and agricultural pursuits, and the consequences will be that industries permanent in their character will be established in our State. For many years mining was practically our only industry worth mentioning and the population we received was transient and of a migratory character, and the result was that the soil was neglected and agriculture almost ignored. The change that has taken place is of the utmost importance and will open a new era in our history. All the available farming lands in Nevada will soon be brought under cultivation, and the population we will receive will be of a thrifty, prominent kind, and the wealth of the State greatly increased. This is the change for which we have labored, and now that it is coming every effort should be made to induce those who are becoming interested in our soil and climate, to make homes with us. An energetic immigration society would not find its efforts unavailing. It is not necessary to exaggerate or draw glowing pictures of our natural resources. An honest representation of facts is all that is required. With one half of our rich but unimproved lands under cultivation, Nevada would be one of the most prosperous States in the Union.—Gazette.

Hops in Nevada.

Offers are being made by purchasers for the hop crop of Washington Territory of this year. Thirteen cents is reported to have been offered in the Upper valley and in Seattle.—Bullion.

Nevada is a magnificent hop country. In several yards in this city, hops are grown and they grow without irrigation, to immense vines. Everybody who visits Carson is astonished at the great size and prolific bearing of the hop vines. A few weeks ago a practical hop grower from California came up here to investigate the soil of Nevada with a view of starting a hop vineyard and hop drier. He finally gave up the idea and as he went away said that he had considered this valley just the place for a big hop vineyard, but so many people had discouraged him that he had concluded not to locate. Curiously enough, he said that he had talked with Jake Klein the brewer, who had told him that he didn't think that hops would do well here. The writer thinks he can convince Jake Klein in about two minutes, that hops will grow here and can also convince him that if he would purchase his dried hops right here in this city, instead of sending below, he would realize a great saving. Klein ought to be the last man to discourage hop growing in Nevada.

An Original Idea.

Mr Thomas Meehan, in a little journal known as Forest Leaves, of which he is editor, hits upon an original idea to encourage tree planting for profit. He argues that if several young men will unite to set out twenty-five or thirty acres of woodland it would be equivalent to laying up money for old age, or as a substitute for life insurance to benefit their heirs in case of their death. The Forest Leaves adds: "As few individuals would perhaps care to lock up land for thirty years or half a century, the chances of success would be greater in forming an association to take up a large tract, and to give such watchfulness to the tree crop as would improve its money value."

A portion of this watchfulness would evidently be to guard against the danger of forest fires. Mr. Meehan's suggestion is not unworthy of consideration.

An Imaginative Writer.

Some of our exchanges discredit the report of a correspondent of the Silver State relative to the "natural gas" of Paradise, and style him a second Munchausen. It is plainly evident that those doubting Thomases never were in Paradise, and are ignorant of the quality of the gas generated there. If they will take the trouble to visit the valley, they will come to the conclusion that the correspondent of the Silver State is not as imaginative as they imagine him to be.—Silver State.
